Four polar bears hungry, exhausted, travel 100 kilometers to find food, and ultimately, they fell on the northern coast of Alaska, and never failed to stand up. All this occurred in 2005. Earth's rising temperatures, the polar bear habitat polar ice is melting. Scientists predict that the polar bear to the end of this century, the maritime glaciers continue to be eroded will lead to extinction! This is just one of the reasons threatening the survival of the world's endangered animals. Habitat loss, human hunting, environmental pollution, industrial development and many other factors, are all threatening the survival of endangered species. Endangered animals in this book, you will encounter the scientists to study and volunteer their lifetime to learn and explore the different factors lead to the disappearance of animals in nature, looking for ways to protect the living environment of animals. Although the outlook is not optimistic, but the achievements of these heroes, brought new hope to the people of the...
